HOW TO USE?

This contains dungeon resources dual-statted for Basic/Expert versions of Dungeons and Dragons and 5th edition Dungeons and Dragons. It's done in the least invasive way possible. If the mechanical utility differs between the two editions, then they will be separated by the conjunction "or". E.g. "This provides a +2 bonus versus surprise or grants advantage on Wisdom(Perception) checks"  indicate passive perception difficulties,  indicate religion difficulties,  indicates device/survival difficulties  indicates investigation difficulties * indicates Strength checks to break and  shows thief's tools difficulties.  Indicates an item's weight in stone (or the number of slots it takes up to carry.)

The page layout of the dungeon areas is intentional. The map is on the left hand side, and the key for the dungeon runs on the right pages. This way, you can always keep the map and key visible.

Only the most broad and neutral stats are given to non-player characters, who should primarily be about personalities, rather than combat encounters. If one does arise, use the advice on page 92 of the 5th edition Dungeon Master's Guide.

Numenhalla is not a "classic" dungeon in the sense that it contains kobolds and orcs, but is classic in the sense that you will feel as if you are exploring a strange fever dream of youth, filled with things you forgot you saw when you were younger, but now wonder how you ever forgot.

This is ostensibly a presentation of the Numenhalla megadungeon, but since it's being presented bit by bit, how do you use it? Lots of different ways. The most honest and wonderful thing you could do would use the entrance halls to start your own dungeon adding in sections from this as they are completed. You could break out the individual dungeon sections or modules and use them as lairs or over-world dungeons. You can use any of the various bits or pieces, such as non-player characters or magic items in any campaign.

Megadungeons expand infinitely so connectors and dead ends can be used as a lair, or a miniature themed area in the megadungeon.

AGONARCH'S ARGOT

You aren't aware of the danger. Is it better that way?

You're damned all the same.

It's madness to think of it as life, like some gold-slick fungus, blooming in decay. Its shape bulges and strains, almost as if it's growing. But it's not growing. The idea that it's growing is a lie and I don't think it knows I know it's a lie.

At first it was just me, whatever is jerking this corpse around pouring out this shape and darkness, possessed to channel this monstrosity into being. I was discovering it, see, and it wanted me to think—

I know better than to ascribe it intent. Is there intent? Whatever autarch would intend such darkness, the world should fear. Best to think of it as natural, like an ice age. Intent would mean a darkening of the human soul I am unprepared to accept.

You see though; I figured it out. It doesn't know that I have yet—or at least, it hasn't changed its slow rapine and desecration of my spirit. Now that I know, maybe something can be done.

But the danger. It must not find this. Does it even look? I must keep this secret. I'll even share this secret with you, but you won't believe me. I'm going to tell you anyway. I'm going to tell you three times. I know you don't listen though. I still have to try.

At first, it comes to you as a thought. "Isn't that interesting" you think. You begin to flesh out your idea, and more and more as you go along, it feels as if you're no longer creating, but discovering. We've all felt that idea before; our creations come from us but we discover rather than create.

But that isn't what's happening at all.

I figured out the truth.

I'm not creating Numenhalla. I'm not discovering it.

Do you understand? Do you see? Behind the eyes of a driver, down a lost hallway, an emotion exerting force. I put the mask on and breath in and out; the machine counts, communes with the black mirror. You see the rules. They don't exist as a material object. You can't possess them. But you know they are there!

I finally figured it out. You see? I'm not creating Numenhalla. I'm not discovering it. Can you find me? Do you understand?

I'm not creating Numenhalla.

I'm not discovering it.

The Magistrate in his Chamber

HEIMDALL

Heimdall saw that man labored very hard, working constantly, receiving little from the Numen. Heimdall flew to man and said, "I am not going to hurt you, but pity you and we shall go to my house, come sit on my back and I will carry you. We shall feast and plan."

THE QUAKING PATH OF EARTH AND FIRE IS GUARDED BY HEIMDALL, ALL PRAISE THE WATCHER OF MAN!

HIS SIGHT AND HEARING ARE SO KEEN THAT HE CAN SEE 100 LEAGUES AT NIGHT, AS WELL AS DAY.
ALL PRAISE HEIMDALL IN HIS GLORY!

HE CAN HEAR THE GRASS GROWING UPON THE EARTH AND WOOL ON THE BACKS OF SHEEP.
HEIMDALL IN THE HIGHEST!

HE GUARDS MAN WITH A FLASHING SWORD ATOP HIS HEAD,
HE OF THE NINE MOTHERS, SEVEN BESIDE TETHYS & HERA,
HE WHO FEEDS ON THE STRENGTH OF THE EARTH AND SEA!

LOUD BLOWS HEIMDALL, HIS HORN ALOFT
ALL WHO HEAR QUAKE IN FEAR!

ALL PRAISE HIM!

32 gold statues, horseshoe bent reflections ward the path, the great servants of Heimdall who serve him. Through the strength of Heimdall, the Gis is provided for and provides, the fuel for our bodies, the fuel for our thoughts.

Heimdall is the protector of man. Watching his charge from the vaulted Holdstyri, he watches the whole of the Gis! His loins are the shape of a man!

Heimdall once wanted to listen to everything at once, and he knew the tree of light, Yggdrasil touched all men, and fed and drank from the logos freely. So Heimdall approached the world tree and told Ratatoskr "I am here to listen to the world," and Ratatoskr replied "You will lose yourself in the roots of the tree."

Heimdall drank of the water of the tree of life, but the water could not be separated, so the ear of Heimdall was sacrificed to Yggdrasil so that Heimdall could carry the water, and so he knows all the concerns and worries of man. He was not lost in the roots of the tree though he wandered far, because the thoughts of man led him free.

SECRETS OF SECRET DOORS

How is a secret door used?

Secret doors are an opportunity for wonder, amazement, and frustration. Good secret doors are the diamond of puzzles: optional, intriguing, and rewarding. But they come with unspoken rules and can be misused.

The rules for secret doors have remained almost unchanged over forty years. Secret doors and passages are not visible. Searching a 10'x10' section of wall takes a full turn. Searching Men, Dwarves, and Hobbits (sic) discover secret doors on a roll of 1 or 2 on a six-sided die, Elves on a roll of 1-4. Elves may automatically discover secret doors they pass with a roll of 1 or 2 on a six-sided die.

After discovery, they are treated as normal doors. Doors inimical to player characters that only open on a roll of 1 or 2. While acceptable, this text is located in Men and Magic, Volume 1:

Caller: Okay, what does the room look like—we're examining the walls, ceiling, floor, and contents of the room itself.

Referee: (After checking to see if dwarves and/or elves are in the party.) The room is a truncated pyramid. The east wall is the truncated part, directly opposite the door you entered. It is 10' long with another door in it. The walls connecting it to the west wall, the place you entered, are each about 35' long. The west wall, which is where you entered is 30' long with a door in the middle of the wall. The elf has noted that there seems to be a hollow spot near the east end of the southeast wall. The floor and ceiling seem to have nothing unusual. The room contains the bodies of the gnolls, a pile of refuse in the north corner of the west wall, and two trunks along the wall opposite the one which sounds hollow.

Caller: The elf will check out the hollow sound, one of us will sort through the refuse, each trunk will be opened by one of us, and the remaining two (naming exactly who this is) will each guard a door, listening to get an advance warning if anything approaches.

Referee: Another check on the hollow sound reveals a secret door which opens onto a flight of stairs down to the south. The refuse is nothing but sticks, bones, offal and old clothes. One chest is empty; the other had a poison needle on the lock. (Here a check to see if the character opening it makes his saving throw for poison.) The chest with the poison needle is full of copper pieces — appears to be about 2,000 of them."

The Referee has taken the mechanical effect and turned it into a real-world situation. The elf doesn't discover a secret door, but rather a 'hollow spot' that could be anything. This is the real magic of secret doors, the mechanism to open a secret door within the environment. This creates interest no matter how the secret door is interacted with.

First, the players don't discover the secret door or the trigger. They go on their way, unencumbered by any knowledge as the treasure and other rooms stay safely hidden away for future delvers. If you don't know you missed something you can't be upset about it.

Second, the players discover the secret door, but not the trigger. They can discern the presence of a passage, but can't access it! This is a puzzle about how to open the door. It's possible to attempt to force it down, or make the noise to bash it apart accepting the consequences.

Third, Players discover the trigger and not the door, and are amazed and surprised when a secret passage opens!

Taking time to create triggering mechanisms for secret doors is the only additional work this requires from the Referee.

Everything behind a secret door must be optional. If something is necessary for play to proceed, don't place it behind a secret door or a puzzle.

The attempt to open the door with the die roll is exactly that. Everyone working together to try and force open the door. Either it's successful, or the group has failed in their efforts to open the door. Retrying is pointless. Attempting to force open a door takes a full turn which assumes retrying is happening. What occurs for the entire 10 minutes they are trying to open the door? They are trying to open it! Failing the roll is a failure.

If unwilling to be deterred, the door can be bashed down. It can be bashed to pieces providing unrestricted access to the passage. It takes longer than a turn, requires some tools that can damage the material of the door and has some side effects. Every monster in rooms within 100 feet show up, in addition to three rolls on the wandering monster table. Dealing with 3+ encounters simultaneously for not figuring out how the door actually opens is a completely reasonable exchange.

If the secret door is opened by a concealed trigger and the players say "We search the area", they find the trigger. Knowing that there is a trigger does not convey information about the effect of the trigger. It could be a trap. Providing multiple things that look like triggers, some of which are trapped, also leads to good gameplay.

Very frequently taking the turn to look around the room provides the trigger to a secret door. But that doesn't mean it's always obvious. A challenging secret door is a room with a trigger requiring activation multiple times. The room is otherwise empty. e.g. Pull the iron chain six times and the secret door opens. Will the players pull the chain six times? It is not known.

This kind of challenge for the secret door is the exception. Like encounters, some secret doors are easy (It's a swiveling wall!) with a low challenge, and some are hard. This balance is key.

Remember choice paralysis. The referee can understand the relationship between different areas of the dungeon. But if a player is approaching an encounter in character, this button could trigger anything in the dungeon! In order to reduce this option paralysis and keep things fun it's good design to provide some guidance as to scope. Much like in a video game, if a switch/trigger doesn't do anything obvious, give some insight into what it might be affecting.

THE HALLS OF HEIMDALL

The Halls of Heimdall are a thoroughfare, where clandestine meetings occur. Migrant boarders can be found in its bedrooms, council is held in these ancient halls.

The encounter table mentions Sarparti, Cionids, and Tuth. These are various factions in Numenhalla that will be detailed at length in future issues of Megadungeon.

Sarparti are groups of naked people all painted in gold, who surround a grand crocodilian lizard. People often think that the lizard is a pet, when in reality, the people are pets of the Sarparti. The Sarparti has no wish to dissuade people of this erroneous notion. Use Yuan-ti statistics for Sarparti, consider the men and women 1st level fighters.

The Cionids are a psionic mobile fungus. They are enigmatic. Myconid statistics are a natural fit.

The Tuth are giant chickens, or perhaps miniature cassowaries. They run in packs and squawk terrifying at their prey. The only noises they can make are those of black-hearted birds, such as geese. They are responsible for the repair and maintenance of Numenhalla. It is unknown how exactly, but they are frequently found beak and claw deep in whatever panel or system they are "fixing". Clearly, psychotically aggressive black-hearted chunky avians are only going to make things better.

The treasure chamber is not displayed in this section, it's visible from the chambers of Immoket detailed on page 25. The only access to it is east of the kitchen in the Halls of Heimdall.

The Galeb Duhr argue like old men, and will grant a boon to anyone who can settle one of their endless arguments. Guidelines for this encounter are on page 12.

The arboretum contains a massive tree, growing here in the depths. It survives by draining power from the logos, and is connected closely to the gods. This has no specific magical effect, other than the room being a really nice place to rest.

The hallway "B" runs underneath the visiting chambers, a three way intersection. The arboretum north, the treasure vault west, and the entrance to the south. All three passages have high ceilings that contain windows allowing you to look up into the hallway around the rooms, or down into the three branches of hallway "B".

The graffiti in the closet refers to the werewolf-alchemist-lich that lives beneath the well in the lavish mine of fur slime, detailed in the next issue of Megadungeon.

There is an abandoned artificers workshop right across the hall from a storage room. The workshop is abandoned because it has several mechanical horrors that hide in the debris, and will murder-kill anyone who disturbs them.

The Megatherium is wild, and has asserted its dominance over this room. A rough exterior hides a soul looking for friends. It is also very hungry and easily distracted. Freeing the megatherium will require breaking the chain and is likely to terrify it a great deal. It can speak but chooses not to.

In the back chambers lies the magistrate's chambers and the old gaol. The magistrate is an old man who will answer questions for a price. If attacked he is easily murdered, and the next time they visit there will be another magistrate, a different old man. The price is something a character finds valuable and the answer is true.

The warden has long been insane and mostly harmless. Who knows what his fate will be once he meets a group of adventurers?

The prison cells are filled with a variety of things, some forgotten people, others empty or with dead or dying occupants. Adventurers should explore at their own risk, and you should feel free to change the contents frequently.

South of the prison cells lies an abominable horror, a cacogen named gluttony, a demon of mouth and teeth that seeks to consume all things.

In the western chambers, a gift from Heimdall to man is hidden with the room with his marble statue. The void chamber allows a look at the vast desert that hides the Numenhalls, and an altar to Heimdall allows control over the vault.

The vault is protected by deadly acidic gas, doing 2d6 damage to any player every round they are within the vault or down the stairs in front of the entrance.

The "Windows" overlooking the treasure room here and in the Chambers of Immoket, are transparent, several feet thick, and as strong as steel, but not invulnerable. They may be disintegrated or destroyed with enough damage. Note that this will cause poison gas to spill into the hallway out of the vault.

Galeb Duhr social encounter (Room #7)

The Galeb Duhr fall silent at an open door. A Galeb Duhr is a rock that talks. They are old, and their skin is very dry, and they argue over far reaching topics.

If ignored, they will ask questions of the players. If threatened, they cease talking and are indistinguishable from rocks. If the players ask if they can do anything for the Galeb Duhr (or if it comes up in conversation and it likely will), they will request that the players settle an argument. They will grant a boon to the player who answers their query.

A spruce spear with a steel head, a steel Flametounge sword with a flame motif engraved on the blade.

LOOTING THE VAULT

The protected ♁ cannot be looted at whim. Any living creature that enters the room triggers a loud ringing sound. Every round there is a 3 in 6 chance of an automatically hostile encounter of a group also coming to loot the vault. Once this alarm begins, steel plates begin to slide down to cover the door, giving the players 2 minutes to collect treasure.

Characters may randomly grab 2 parcels from random categories a minute, OR they may select a category (gold, gems, armor, et. al.) and receive a random parcel from that category. Parcels have normal encumbrance, overloaded characters can manage 60' a minute, making them easy prey for treasure seekers. Hirelings and other non leveled characters selfishly grab 1d100 gp in treasure and ignore directions.

Characters who insist on identifying items instead of getting on with the looting find it difficult to do in the dim light and confounding mess. They can select one category and select one item from that list in the time they have.

KEYS

Parts of a Key

Bitting: The part of the key that actually touches the lock, it's covered in cuts of a variety of heights.

Blade: The shaft of the key, on which the bitting, wards, and cuts rest.

Bow: The handle of the key, the part that is grasped and turned when it is inserted into the lock.

Cuts: The notches made on the blade of the key. They raise and lower and turn the internal parts of the lock, allowing the key to unlock the lock.

Keyway: The silhouette or profile of a key created by the shaft of the key including the presence of any wards. This is the exact opposite of the keyway of the lock (obviously).

Shoulder: The connection between the bow and the blade of the key - usually serving the purpose of stopping the key from going too far into the lock.

Tip: The other side of the key, opposite the bow.

Warding: These are protrusions or distortions to the blade that prevent it from being used with other locks, besides the intended lock.

Pick up your whole set, a d4, d6, d8, d100, d12 and d20, and roll all the dice. Default keys have plain solid round bows,

UNLOCK STRENGTH (1d100)

This is how you determine which keys open which doors. Generate an unlock strength for the key using a 1d100. When the players try a key, randomly generate a number. If the key value is higher, the door opens. You can pregenerate the key and door numbers. Once a key is used, it breaks and is no longer usable. The door remains forever unlocked. An even value indicates that the key is gilded (d100>50) or painted (d100<50). If the value is a multiple of 11, then the key is attached to a ring, with 1d4+1 other keys.

SHAPE OF KEY (1d4)

1. Barrel
2. Flat
3. Corrugated
4. Reroll. If 4 again, result is skeleton key

CHAMBERS OF IMMOKET

Long ago these chambers were devoted to Tyr, now they are corrupted by the Ogdoad, the shadow lord Immoket, their foul ranadin, and his hidden bowl of shadows. This is one of the four great corruptions and blights of the Numenhalls.

The entrance chamber features a destroyed statue of Tyr, now only rubble. In it's place sits a statue of a gross black toad, who's eyes gleam nefariously. This chamber is watched by a pack of vicious Anthropophagi. They will not hesitate to attack the party, for they hunger.

A room of filth to the east, hides small stones in the floor that open the secret doors—all of them— in the room to the east. The north stone opens the north door, the east stone opens the east door, etc. There is only one secret door adjacent to this room, so the players may hear grinding or mechanical noises to the east if they are listening when they push the stones.

A brutal beast of Mogyosth lairs here, and will brutally attack all intruders. He possesses a doll he stole from a small girl who lives in Arclight.

In the Anthropophagi's lair, a window looks down over a treasure-filled room that is only accessible via the Halls of Heimdall. The glass here is just like the glass in the other room, several feet thick and as hard as steel. Any sort of noise will certainly draw many people to investigate.

The secret door in the north hall is opened by reconnecting a broken copper pipe. That same hall is a deadly trap. Once more weight is on the east side of the * than is on the west, the entire hallway tips and dumps everyone into spikes. The hall is very long, so be aware of how far the players can see, usually by the time the lead character can make out the bodies and spikes, the hallway is already tilting.

There is a spacial instability that links the passage beyond 22 with the chamber of pillars. It simply appears that those walking through it are just continuing south. The rift in space however has left them pointing east, in a different passage. This should cause some confusion with the mapping, so wizards, or those proficient in arcana or spellcraft, can easily discover the rift if they choose to look. If not actively looking, a DC 25 perception, spell craft, or arcana check might allow them notice it. The star indicates the spacial overlap.

The olive slime is a malign intelligence. Its closeness to the dark power of the Ogdoad is not making it less malign. It has severants that patrol these halls.

The Bowl of Shadows is hidden, far in the back passages, beyond the spacial rift. And within lie the Hu-thi, shadows of what once might have been men. They attack from the inky darkness, indistinguishable from the black.

Nezumi

"Some may say they are rats that turn into men, others say that they are men that turn into rats. Neither is true. The truth is much worse, below in the endless tunnels, the rats grow and thrive, they grow larger than any space can contain. The rats fold in upon each other and become something else. . . something greater. Men heed the call of this song—wisdom from some ancient cacogen horror."

"They say that the gods put all the wealth of mankind in the Numenhalls for us to use once we crossed the great desert. Are the Nezumi emerging from that same wealth a sign of fortune. . . or famine."

"They say if the rats eat your hose or garters, it means your death has been prognosticated. I think that's how the Nezumi can kill you."

Nezumi are not a race, but instead a group of cultists that are variably influenced by alien cacogenic powers.
